Identity and Loss

One of the central themes of Dust Net is the complex and ever-changing nature of identity. As Anya and the other characters navigate the challenges of immigration and assimilation, they are forced to confront their own sense of who they are and where they belong. Anya, for example, struggles to reconcile her Russian heritage with her new American identity. She feels like an outsider in both worlds, belonging fully to neither.

Dvorkin also explores the theme of loss in Dust Net. The characters in the novel have all experienced some form of loss, whether it be the loss of a loved one, a homeland, or a way of life. Anya, for example, grieves the loss of her father, while her mother struggles with the loss of her home and her community in Russia. Family and Relationships

Family and relationships play a central role in Dust Net. The novel examines the complex dynamics of family life, the love and support that families can provide, as well as the conflicts and tensions that can arise. Anya's relationship with her mother is particularly well-developed. The two women have a close bond, but they also have their differences. Anya's mother is a traditional Russian woman, while Anya is more independent and Americanized. Their relationship is strained at times, but they ultimately love and support each other.

Dvorkin also explores the theme of friendship in Dust Net. Anya forms a close friendship with a fellow Russian immigrant named Boris. Boris is a kind and supportive friend, and he helps Anya to adjust to her new life in America. Their friendship is a source of strength for both of them.
