

Unveiling the Enchanting World of Children's Poetry and Illustrative Masterpieces

There was a boy, his name was Mack,
Who's eyes were brown, and hair was black,
In fact you'd say he seemed quite average,
But the truth you cannot imagine—
But Mack could, boy could he ever,
His simple thoughts could cause a terror,
Because when he sat to think a while,
Mack's imagination could run quite wild.
What Mack thought, came to be real,
And a young boy's mind is a thing to fear,
So avoid Mack, or you'll be sorry,
When he is day dreaming of an African Safari!
